

The Story We Leave

VERSE 1

There's a whisper in the quiet, a thread that time can't hide
Every laugh and every stumble lives somewhere deep inside
The moments we thought were nothing now hold more weight than stone
In the album of our becoming, every page we've outgrown

Chorus

We're writing lines we'll never read in books we'll never hold
The story that we leave behind is braver than we know
It's written in the spaces where we learn to let things go

VERSE 2

I found your letter in the attic, words you never meant to send
About the person you were trying to become back then, my friend
The ink has faded but the longing still burns across the page
A testament to all the ways we've turned another age

We're writing lines we'll never read in books we'll never hold
The story that we leave behind is braver than we know
It's written in the spaces where we learn to let things go

BRIDGE

Sometimes I wonder if the mountain remembers every step we took
Or if the river keeps the echo of every stone we shook
Maybe we're all just passing chapters in something larger than we see
But every word we've ever spoken becomes part of history

There's a photo on my table of a day I can't recall
Your face is turned toward something just beyond the camera's call

And I think that's how it happens, we're always looking past
The very moments that will matter when nothing else will last

Final Chorus

We're writing lines we'll never read in books we'll never hold
The story that we leave behind is braver than we know
It's written in the spaces where we learn to let things go
Where we learn to let things go
